

There is an increasing number of humanitarian actions going on in Africa today. Scores of young Africans are making a meaning out of their talents and skills. The entertainment landscape in the continent continues to grow from lips and bounds, giving birth to more heroes and heroines. Africa is embracing technology, not only from the user perspective, but from the development end. Many young tech inventors, including app developers are emerging from the continent. However, with all this going on, little of it is being reported, either by the mainstream media or by citizen journalists. Even when these stories are being told and the people making things happen talked about, they aren't celebrated to the extent the world can appreciate Africa.
